US GOVERNMENT POSTS $44 BILLION DEFICIT IN OCTOBER

The U.S. government posted a $44 billion budget deficit in October, the first month of the 2017 fiscal year, a 68 percent decrease from the same month last year, the Treasury Department said. This gap in October 2015 was $137 billion, according to Treasury's monthly budget statement. Analysts polled by Reuters had expected an $80 billion budget deficit for last month. When accounting for calendar adjustments, October would have shown an $84 billion deficit compared to an adjusted $88 billion deficit in the same month of 2015. Since 2009, when President Barack Obama assumed the presidency in the aftermath of the financial crisis, the deficit has fallen by two thirds. President-elect Donald Trump has promised to cut taxes and increase spending on infrastructure and the military, which would raise the deficit, economists say. REUTERS

JUDGE REJECTS TRUMP BID TO BAR CAMPAIGN STATEMENTS FROM FRAUD TRIAL

A U.S. judge on Thursday tentatively rejected a bid by Donald Trump to keep a wide range of statements from the presidential campaign out of an upcoming fraud trial over his Trump University venture. U.S. District Judge Gonzalo Curiel in San Diego said Trump's lawyers can renew objections to specific campaign statements and evidence during trial. The tentative ruling came in advance of a pretrial hearing later on Thursday. The 2010 lawsuit, one of three over the defunct Trump University venture, was filed on behalf of students who say they were lured by false promises to pay up to $35,000 to learn Trump's real estate investing "secrets" from his "hand-picked" instructors. Trump owned 92 percent of Trump University and had control over all major decisions, the students' court papers say. REUTERS

MADAME TUSSAUDS LONDON WORKS ON NEW TRUMP WAX FIGURE

A new addition will soon be coming to Madame Tussauds, London's famed wax museum, which on Thursday showed some of the behind-the-scenes work on making a replica figure of U.S. President-elect Donald Trump. The museum had already created clay sculptures of the Republican Trump and his Democratic rival, Hillary Clinton, before Tuesday's election. It is now embarking on the full wax figure in time for Trump's Jan. 20 inauguration. On its Facebook page, Madame Tussauds on Thursday revealed the wax head for the Trump figure, with a hair inserter slowly starting work on the New York businessman's distinctive blonde hairstyle. REUTERS

Charities and nonprofits see boost in support after election

People are donating money and volunteering their time to organizations that benefit their communities.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

While many Americans on Wednesday morning were processing the fact that Donald Trump had been elected president, Amy Derjue was busy making charitable donations.

"I was disappointed in the outcome and I felt like I wanted to do something, aside from voting," the 35-year-old public relations professional from Quincy said.

She made donations to Planned Parenthood, the American Civil Liberties Union, the Committee to Protect Journalists and GLAAD, an LGBT activist organization.

"I felt that by supporting organizations that support the groups of people I value made me feel less disappointed in the outcome and like I was taking some agency back," Derjue said. "Instead of just posting to social media, I'm literally putting my money where my mouth is."

Derjue said that she thinks a lot of people are having a "Monday morning quarterback" feeling in which they realize they may have not participated enough in the election. Just as thousands took to Boston's streets to protest Trump's win, many people are now trying to keep alive organizations that help populations Trump doesn't seem to support.

Donations to the ACLU of Massachusetts have seen a 500 percent jump compared to this time last year, representative Aaron Wolfson said. The influx can be traced to around midnight on Election Day.

Along with an uptick in monetary contributions — many from first-time donors — the ACLU has seen a record number of people reaching out to volunteer, showing that people are willing to give both their time and money, Wolfson said.

Time is just as important a commodity, especially for organizations like Big Brothers Big Sisters of Massachusetts Bay. BBBS pairs kids with adult mentors for long-term relationships that president and CEO Wendy Foster said "change the lives of these children for the better forever."

"There's just something really, really powerful about that in light of this election, about the ability of people to come together and make the fabric of the community — which is so frayed right now — repaired and stronger."

Wendy Foster

BBBS relies on volunteers to invest their time in hanging out with these children. On a normal weekday, the organization receives about four to six volunteer applications, Foster said.

Since Tuesday evening, more than 50 people have reached out about becoming a volunteer.

"It's a very significant increase and I have to say, it's one of the most heartening things on a day like today when you realize how divided our country is," Foster said.

Foster noted that since many of the volunteers are middle- or upper-class, educated working professionals and the kids receiving mentors are often minorities who are at or below the poverty level, the relationships bring together different parts of the community who likely would have never met if not for BBBS.

"There's just something really, really powerful about that in light of this election, about the ability of people to come together and make the fabric of the community — which is so frayed right now — repaired and stronger," she said. "If we want to create a society where everybody matters and fight against bigotry and intolerance, then we do have to be a role model for children."

Some donors have been attaching personal notes to their contributions, saying things like "This is what little I can do to try to help our world following the election results," and "Thank you so much ... for being a resource I know I can count on no matter how politics go."

Thank you, veterans, for giving kids a future we can fight for.

We honor all American veterans on this and every day. And welcome those who'd like to join us in giving children the future they deserve.

People trash sneakers in response to New Balance support for Trump

The Boston-based shoe company said it only agrees with his trade views, but that isn't reassuring people.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
@kristindakota
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Some sneaker wearers are running away from New Balance after it publicly backed President-elect Donald Trump.

The Boston-based company has criticized the Obama administration in the past because of the Trans-Pacific Partnership and Trump has already announced he would withdraw from the TPP during his first 100 days in office.

In a statement to the Wall Street Journal, New Balance said that "Obama turned a deaf ear to us and frankly with President-elect Trump we feel things are going to move in the right direction."

Matt LeBretton, vice president of public affairs at New Balance, walked back the statement slightly in an interview with BuzzFeed. The quote was correct but it was taken out of context, he said.

"The statement [quoted by Sarah Germano] is correct in the context of trade, not talking about large geopolitical anything, but in the context of the Trans-Pacific Partnership agreement," he told BuzzFeed.

LeBretton continued to say the statements "aren't political," and the company only has opposition to the trade agreement. Still, that hasn't satisfied everyone.

"You can't cherry pick what you like about [Trump]," one Twitter user replied to Germano's tweet of the company's statement. "This means you approve of his racism and sexism."

After Sole Collector, a sneaker-focused news site, wrote about the company's statements, sneaker aficionados responded to the article with images of their sneakers in the trash. Some even showed how they were destroying the shoes by burning them.

In a statement to Metro, a spokesperson for New Balance highlighted ed that the company is committed to making their shoes at their five factories throughout New England and said that the company works to support American manufacturing and jobs.

"As the only major company that still makes athletic shoes in the United States, New Balance has a unique perspective on trade in that we want to make more shoes in the United States, not less," the statement read. "New Balance publicly supported the trade positions of Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders and Donald Trump prior to election day that focused on American manufacturing job creation and we continue to support them today. We believe in community. We believe in humanity."

Carjacking suspects arrested after chase across two states

A carjacking that led police on a chase spanning two states Thursday morning ended with the arrest of the driver in a cul-de-sac outside of Worcester, state police said.

Christopher Harding, 21, of Dayville, Connecticut, was apprehended after troopers chased him from Route 395 to Route 20 and into a residential Worcester neighborhood. He faces a slate of charges in connection with the alleged carjacking.

Harding allegedly stabbed someone and stole a car in Thompson, Connecticut, on Thursday morning and fled toward Massachusetts. The stabbing victim suffered serious injuries that weren't life-threatening, according to police.

Massachusetts troopers were notified that a dark-colored Nissan Rogue, wanted in connection to the crime, had crossed into their state while traveling on Route 395. Within minutes, troopers spotted the vehicle. The driver merged onto Route 20 in Auburn and when troopers pulled up alongside the Rogue, the driver tried to ram the police cruiser.

Troopers chased the Rogue into Worcester and into a residential neighborhood before the pursuit ended in the driveway of a two-story colonial home on Papagin Terrace, a cul-de-sac.

The driver wasn't ready to give up though, and again tried to ram the police vehicle and struck a car parked in the driveway.

Neither police nor the suspects were injured during the pursuit. No charges have been filed against a female passenger and police are not releasing her identity. ERIN TIERNAN

'Messages of love' for Boston's immigrant students

A Facebook group has dozens of positive messages.

ERIN TIERNAN
@MetroNewYork
erin.tiernan@metro.us

A Boston teacher is asking the community to send "messages of love" to immigrant students unsure of how they will be treated under the Donald Trump administration.

After a campaign season filled with vitriol and anti-immigrant rhetoric, Martha Boisselle wanted to flip the message for her students at Brighton High School, who she says feel "scared and unwanted." Boisselle teaches English as a second language.

Her solution was a Facebook group, which she named Messages of Love.

"During these turbulent times, it is so important that all immigrants know that we support them and stand with them," Boisselle wrote on group's Facebook page. "Please post a status update or video assuring my students that they are welcomed and appreciated."

In just 12 hours, the group attracted over 500 members and dozens of messages of hope for Boisselle's students.

"Students are seeing messages from Chile, Texas, California — they're starting to be from all over the country and those areas that they fear the most," she said. "Seeing all this light and love, it's just such an organic, beautiful thing that I didn't imagine would catch on like this."

The messages are making her students happy, too, she Boisselle said.

"Oh my gosh, I love you," Mena, a senior, said in response to messages she read aloud at Muslim Club after school Thursday.

A smile spread across her face in response to all the kind words.

"I just wanted to send a video message to tell you that we love you all and we appreciate you and are so happy to have you in our great country of America,"

"During these turbulent times, it is so important that all immigrants know that we support them and stand with them."

Martha Boisselle

Evan Kenney of Cambridge said in the first message posted to the group.

Many others echoed Kenney's message.

"I am so glad you are here, making this country a stronger, more beautiful, and more interesting place," Angela Simonelli wrote.

Trump meets Obama

Two days after winning the electoral vote, the two discussed the challenges and joys of the job, despite Obama earlier calling Trump unfit and Trump calling his tenure a "distaster."

President Barack Obama and President-elect Donald Trump met on Thursday for the first time, setting aside the deep rancor that dominated the long campaign season to discuss the transition to the Republican's inauguration on Jan. 20.

Their 90-minute meeting in the White House Oval Office, with no aides present, took place just two days after Trump's stunning election defeat of former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton.

Obama, who vigorously campaigned for his fellow Democrat to succeed him, had repeatedly called Trump unfit for the president's office, while the businessman had often dubbed Obama's eight-year tenure a "distaster."

But in separate post-election remarks on Wednesday both men appeared to seek to help the country heal from a bitterly divisive campaign, and that tone continued into the White House meeting.

Seated next to Obama after their talks, Trump told reporters: "We really discussed a lot of situations, some wonderful, some difficulties." He said Obama explained "some of the really great things that have been achieved," but did not elaborate.

"It was a great honor being with you and I look forward to being with you many, many more times in the future," Trump said, with a tone of deference.

Trump, a real estate magnate who has never held political office, later met congressional leaders, including House of Representatives Speaker Paul Ryan, a Republican who has had a strained relationship with the party's presidential candidate.

Amid those efforts to bury hatchets, there were scattered protests in a string of U.S. cities against Trump for a second day on Thursday. Security fences were erected around Trump's new hotel in Washington, just blocks from the White House, and around New York's Trump Tower as students protested his election.

Obama said he had offered assistance to Trump over the next couple of months, and urged the country to unite to face its challenges.

"We now are going to want to do everything we can to help you succeed because if you succeed, then the country succeeds," Obama said, adding he and Trump discussed a range of domestic and foreign policy issues and details related to the transition period.

"The meeting might have been at least a little less awkward than some might have expected," White House spokesman Josh Earnest told reporters.

Obama and Trump's relaxed, cordial demeanor in front of the cameras was in stark contrast to the months of harsh rhetoric during the campaign.

Trump used Obama as a punching bag during his campaign speeches, repeatedly attacking the president's policies from health care to an Iran nuclear deal. Both Obama and first lady Michelle Obama attacked Trump as temperamentally unfit for the White House and dangerously unprepared to have access to U.S. nuclear codes. REUTERS

Women Are Taking Back Their SEXUAL PLEASURE...AGAIN!

New scientific and clinical advances made for women over 50 who want arousal, desire and more satisfaction whenever they need it ... Published clinical trials show it works!

Susan Washington
Health News Editor

If you're like most women, getting aroused and enjoying sex does not always happen as "automatically" as you'd like. It's just too easy to put your sexual needs on the back burner. Science shows that prescription drugs and medical problems kill your sex drive...declining estrogen leave you with vaginal dryness...fatigue that drains your desire...and painful sex makes achieving orgasm almost impossible.

Maybe it's too embarrassing for you to talk about with your doctor. But don't give up! "Sexual satisfaction is something that all women deserve, at any age and at every stage in life," said Dr. Bassam Damaj, chief scientific officer at the world famous Innovus Pharma Laboratories.

"Men have their 'little blue pill,' and now our scientists have discovered a clinically proven solution just for women that gives them control of their sex life again," said Dr. Damaj. What is it? It's called Zestra® — a patented clinically tested botanical oil blend that ignites your senses with sexual desire and arousal.

"The incredible results shocked our research team so much that a second much larger clinical trial was conducted over a 16 weeks' period to verify and confirm the results observed in the first one," Damaj remarked. "There's never been any all natural on demand product like it. Now women are rushing to get it as fast as we can make it."

MIND-BLOWING CLINICAL PROOF

Zestra® statistically and significantly superior to placebo in normal and FSD patients: Significant clinical improvement of arousal, desire and orgasm FSEP parameters

The Astonishing Science Behind "Lighting Your Fire"

The secret to Zestra® is in the combination of natural essential oils mixed together at the right concentration to allow vasodilation or higher blood flow. "As a drug developer who trained in companies like Pfizer, the maker of the blue pill and other large pharmaceutical companies, I've studied how vasodilators increase the blood flow to the vagina, allowing it to engorge with pleasure in minutes," says Damaj. "It works to heighten a woman's sensitivity to touch, resulting in deeper, more pleasurable sensations and sexual satisfaction."

Impressive clinical results show that 50% of the women actually had a statistically significant increase in arousal, desire and satisfaction.

Zestra® has been clinically proven to benefit women who were medically categorized with a specific subset of "female sexual dysfunction" (FSD), called Female Interest Arousal Disorder (FSI/AD) including problems with desire, arousal, achieving orgasm, and sexual pain disorders. In fact, in two placebo controlled, double-blind, cross-over study on 276 women ranging in age from 21-65 many of whom were on libido-killing medications like antidepressants, post chemotherapy for breast cancer or going through menopause — 50% of the women experienced statistically significant increase in arousal, desire and satisfaction. And a whopping 93% of women who've tried it say they would definitely recommend Zestra to a friend. The clinical trials were published by the top gynecologists in the United States including; Dr. David Ferguson and the product is backed by world-renowned gynecologists including Dr. Susan Kellogg-Spadt and Dr. Michael Krychman.

The "Zestra Rush" Gets You Hot In Just Five Minutes!

Whether you're 21 or 51 or 81 — Zestra® is easy to use and works fast! Simply massage the oil from the packette onto the clitoris and labia before foreplay, and within a few short minutes experience the Zestra Rush! 'To Kill a Mockingbird' (Netflix)

You think you got it bad? Well, you do. But so did the people in the 1930s South, particularly if they weren't white. Watch as a little Caucasian girl named Scout (Mary Badham) learns the power of doing right for others from a father (Gregory Peck) so decent, so good that we're still shell-shocked that author Harper Lee turned him into a racist in last year's superfluous sequel. But Atticus Finch will always be a hero, if you only watch the film version.

THE FUN STARTS HERE

Stream and chill: Movies to help ease the President Trump blues

Look, we're not going to mince words: We are epically bummed out. Some of you might be celebrating a Trump win, but the rest of us are feeling a little bleak. We don't have any tips on how to make things better, but sometimes a little distraction helps. Here are films now streaming on various services that will make you feel better — some relevant, some sad, some mindless fun.

MATT PRIGGE

'PEE-WEE'S BIG ADVENTURE' (NETFLIX)

We're not going anywhere near the Midwest until Trump is out of office. But we will watch movies about it — movies where the people are nice and kind and not horrible. Drink in the sights and sounds of an idyllic small town life that never existed in the first big movie for both Tim Burton and Paul Reubens' Pee-wee Herman. All Pee-wee wants is his bike back, and to find it he'll roam the country, meeting kind, eccentric souls who would never vote for a demagogue that wants to banish Mexicans to Mexico.

'DAZED AND CONFUSED' (NETFLIX)

Once we saw a double feature of "Batman v Superman" and "Everybody Wants Some!!" The first was a chaotic drag that made our heads hurt. Then we walked into the Linklater, which had no plot and simply hung with some fun-loving bros. Instantly we felt better — like the film was fast-acting aspirin. Right now, the best thing you can do is turn on that film's "spiritual" predecessor, which does nothing but roam around with a bunch of Austin high schoolers.

'THE BIG SHORT' (NETFLIX)

Our president-elect might as well be one of the villains in this comedy about the events that led to the 2008 economic apocalypse. Frankly, all the numbers talk is still confusing, even when delivered by Ryan Gosling in a bad hairpiece, or Margot Robbie in a bathtub. But Adam McKay tries his best to make unspeakable tragedy fun, and anger-making.

'HAIRSPRAY' (NETFLIX)

Ignored upon release then reclaimed as one of Broadway's biggest draws, John Waters' 1988 comedy is a social issue movie his way, even if it scored him his first (and, to date, only) PG. Ricki Lake is the bright-eyed teen who battles racism in 1960s Baltimore, learns the joys of miscegenation and shows what a bunch of backward morons most white people can be when they're in power.

'TANGERINE' (NETFLIX)

Add trans people to the list of groups whose hard-won rights will be in jeopardy soon enough. Let's stay positive, though, or at least take in Sean S. Baker's raucous comedy, which trails two trans sex workers (Kitana Kiki Rodriguez and Mya Taylor) on a crazy Christmas Eve, not just trying to get by, but screaming and hollering and raising Cain as they do it.

'IN THE LOOP' (NETFLIX)

Frankly, any time's good to feel bad about the government. So howl through this British black comedy — a spin-off of the brilliant government show "The Thick of It" that finds spin doctor Malcolm Tucker (Peter Capaldi) all but breathing fire as he guides England through the lead-up to a war with an anonymous Middle Eastern country. The writing staff includes a "swearing consultant." He earns his keep, and how.

'WATTSTAX' (FILMSTRUCK)

The new, cinephile-centric streaming service FilmStruck boasts untold goodies. It also contains this vital doc/concert movie from 1973, which hangs at a music concert honoring the 1965 Watts riots. In between killer sets by Rufus and Carla Thomas and Isaac Hayes, it sneaks in bracing chats about race with, among others, a lacerating Richard Pryor. And it's improbably directed by the guy who made "Willy Wonka and the Chocolate Factory"!

'BASIC INSTINCT' (NETFLIX)

Once upon a time, Paul Verhoeven's steamy thriller was enemy No. 1 for the likes of GLAAD and Queer Nation. They were right to be peeved that the fourth biggest film of 1992 boasted a killer bisexual. But Verhoeven is a tricky one, and you can always read it this way: The hero is Sharon Stone's Catherine Tramell. She's the smartest person in any room, and it's great fun watching her lay waste to old school man's men.

'AN UNMARRIED WOMAN' (NETFLIX)

Hailing from the good old second wave of feminism, Paul Mazursky's 1978 character study portrays a tough, independent woman (an Oscar-nominated Jill Clayburgh) as she reshuffles her life after her caddish husband (Michael Murphy) abruptly dumps her. It's all a fantasy, set in a New York City that's basically a rich person's playground. But its portrait of a woman who does right by herself is nothing if not timely.

'BRINGING UP BABY' (AMAZON)

Unlike the other titles here, you'll have to pay to stream Howard Hawks' primo screwball comedy, with Katharine Hepburn as a socialite relentlessly destroying the life of paleontologist Cary Grant. We say this is the funniest movie ever made, and it's 102 minutes not spent thinking about how we're all doomed.

In "Loving," Ruth Negga and Joel Edgerton play Mildred and Richard Loving, a couple who fought anti-miscegenation laws from 1958 to 1967.

"Loving"

What if you're interested in social issues but hate the sledgehammer wielded by movies about them? Let's say you care about what happens in the world and know that films can subtly change the culture, but you also get hives during big speeches, bald exposition and "artistic liberties" that murder complexity. Jeff Nichols' "Loving," then, was made to order. Instead of pummeling us, it's as gentle as its heroes, Richard and Mildred Loving, two shy Virginians who fell in love and got married in 1958, despite their state's law barring the union of two like them, namely one white, one black.

The Lovings changed history. Loving v. Virginia went to the Supreme Court in 1967 and the ruling helped mow down the nation's anti-miscegenation laws. But the couple, represented by ACLU lawyers, never attended the trial. They hated the spotlight. "Loving" gets that. In the film, Richard (Joel Edgerton) and Mildred (Ruth Negga) are just regular people. They never think to see themselves as a problem beyond the legal kind, and they don't even make a fuss when they realize they have to sneak up to D.C. to get hitched. When police raid their home before dawn, ejecting the couple from bed and into separate jail cells, it's the beginning of a long, hard battle — but not the kind that makes for your standard simplistic history lesson.

Nichols ("Take Shelter," "Midnight Special") sticks by their side the entire time, doing little but observing. Each scene feels like he took the outline of a traditional docudrama scene and smudged the edges till it felt natural. It has a strong sense of people but also places; you feel like you're there as history happens, which won't feel like history after. Nichols is a lot like the Time magazine photographer (Michael Shannon), who visits them for an article, but takes the time to hang with them, earning their trust, only taking their picture when they've forgotten he's there. It gets to know them and, thus, stays true. MATT PRIGGE

In "Arrival," Amy Adams plays an esteemed linguist trying to stop the globe's military powers from picking a fight with aliens. Good luck with that. PARAMOUNT PICTURES

"Arrival"

Director: Denis Villeneuve

Stars: Amy Adams,
Jeremy Renner

● ● ● ● ●

Brainy yet expensive, "Arrival" is an alien movie that flaunts its desire to be less "Independence Day," more "Close Encounters of the Third Kind." It's slow and measured, filled with moments where the audience is supposed to collectively hush, open their jaws in unison and go awe. It's not, however, as gee-whiz as "Close Encounters" — but then, this is 2016.

Turns out our alien visitors — whose ships, which look like giant contacts lenses, one day materialize over several key parts of the globe — have come to talk. Trouble is, neither side knows how to do that. Because it's been released into the Age of Trump, our hero, of course, is a brainiac linguist. Amy Adams plays Dr. Louise Banks, tasked — alongside scientist Jeremy Renner — by the military with figuring out the hell our new guests, who look like hands with tentacles for fingers, are trying to say. That involves decoding not their speech but their written language: circular splotches that resemble a marriage of Rorschach tests with Spirograph doodles.

Yes, "Arrival" is the kind of $50 million sci-fi movie where our heroes debate the Sapir-

Whorf theory of language. But it wants to reach a wide audience without dumbing itself down. It doesn't, and it brings real awe thanks to director Denis Villeneuve ("Prisoners," "Sicario"). He captures the feeling of being alongside two people as they patiently try to make contact. He allows each scene between the aliens and humans to play out with nervous anticipation. "Arrival" is heavy and menacing, but it isn't humorless; there are a couple actual jokes, including a decent Sheena Easton one. If it overreaches in its final stretch — with one twist whose scientific bona fides will probably be debunked in a killjoy Slate article — it never jumps the shark. MATT PRIGGE

"Almost Christmas"

Director: David E. Talbert

Stars: Danny Glover,
Gabrielle Union

It's come to this: One solid way of detoxing after a legendarily pugilistic election season — while preparing for the gruesome aftermath to come — is to watch a movie about a family bickering. "Almost Christmas" is by no means a great movie, and it sticks right to the Christmas movie formula, mixing the sour and the sweet, the madcap and the sentimental. On the other hand, it has lots of very funny people in it, all bouncing off each other, inspiring each other to go bigger and sometimes weirder. It's lazy to fall back on actors ad-libbing, but it's only a crime when they don't bring it.

Entirely chill with being no more than holiday comfort food, "Almost Christmas" crams a large family into an Atlanta suburb house, sadistically forcing them to spend four days under dad's (Danny Glover) creaky roof. The plot threads are stock and moldy. But they also give just enough time for a sprawling ensemble cast to shine. The MVPs are Gabrielle Union, as the tetchy daughter; J.B. Smoove as the other daughter's (Kimberly Elise) maybe philandering husband; and definitely Mo'Nique, in her first big movie since "Precious," flinging insults and dressing like Chaka Khan and leading an epic mid-film song-and-dance-off that should be uninspiring but is near-transcendent. It's a thrill to have her back.

Contrary to the dysfunction on-screen, everyone seems to be having the time of their lives, engaged in friendly competition of who can improvise the best line before someone comes up with something even better. They're as inspired as the screenplay isn't, and director David E. Talbert ("First Sunday") just lets them loose and knows how to pace things at their breakneck speed. By the time it's gotten to a bittersweet bit where Glover messily improvises his late wife's famous recipe for sweet potato pie while "talking" to her, it's done more than give us respite from the hell outside the multiplex. MP

Mo'Nique, Kimberly Elise and Gabrielle Union are all pretty game in "Almost Christmas." QUANTRELL D. COLBERT

Jennifer Grey in Season 2 of "Red Oaks," now streaming on Amazon. AMAZON STUDIOS

Jennifer Grey says the '80s feel like yesterday

The throwback actress revisits the era in Amazon's "Red Oaks."

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

Jennifer Grey has made her way back to the '80s.

This time around, instead of a Catskills resort, it's a New Jersey country club, "Red Oaks."

In Amazon's sweet, slice-of-life comedy series, the actress plays Judy Myers, a slightly neurotic housewife on a quest to find herself after she and her husband, Sam (Richard Kind), split up.

Not unlike her son, the college-age David (Craig Roberts), who coaches tennis at the club while trying to figure out what he wants to do with his life, Judy is also coming of age. Season 2, out Friday, shows her exploring her new found freedom — and bisexuality — like "an adolescent in a midlife body," says Grey.

We chatted with the 56-year-old actress about what she misses most about the era, and why we won't be seeing her in the "Dirty Dancing" remake.

What's it like going back to the '80s?

It feels like yesterday. Doesn't feel like such a big deal. It feels like yesterday, without cellphones and the internet. Which means, people look at each other when they walk down the street. They look at the road when they're driving, and they talk to each other without feeling like they need to be looking at their phones at the same time. That's how it's different.

And the teenagers [today], the only way you can get them to do anything is take away their phone. We don't spank anymore, we take away their phones.

"Red Oaks" is a world before we were invaded by devices we're trying to connect to each other through, but are definitely not providing us with the connection we're craving.

You sound pretty nostalgic.

I'm nostalgic for boredom, daydreaming, looking out the window in the car, sitting with your thoughts, processing your feelings, thinking about things in a deeper way, because your brain and your emotions naturally want to process things in a deeper way if they're given a chance. Oh, and books. [Laughs]

We read that you turned down a role in ABC's "Dirty Dancing" remake.

People really talk about that a lot, almost every day I've done press. It's not so much that I turned it down, because that sounds so crappy. It's just that it's not appropriate. I did the original, and if someone wants to make a new one they should do a new one, but not with me, because then it's not a new one. I'm excited for them and I want to see what they come up with. I respect their vision. It should be its own thing.

We have to ask: Will there be any dance numbers in this season of "Red Oaks"?

I dance with my son at a wedding this season. Hope that's not a spoiler. No big musical numbers, no. They know I can't dance. [Laughs]

Another series with '80s vibes: "Stranger Things." Have you watched it?

I loved the '80s of that. I love those kids so much. [Director/producer] Shawn Levy's a friend of mine, he did a great job, those Duffer brothers [creators] did a great job, and that young English girl [Millie Bobby Brown] who plays Eleven. The show is very much a genre of "Poltergeist," psychic phenomenon — a kind of sci-fi thing. [But "Red Oaks"] is nothing like that.

3 Things to watch for as Patriots host Seahawks

The Pats are fresh off a bye heading into the Super Bowl XLIX rematch.

The New England Patriots are rested and ready for a Sunday Night Football matchup against one of the best teams in the NFL in the Seattle Seahawks (8:30 p.m., NBC). And the last time the Patriots had a week off before a big game against the Seahawks, the words "Malcolm, go!" went down in history.

It's a Super Bowl XLIX rematch, but just how much of a "rematch" is it? There is great turnover in the NFL and the Patriots and the Seahawks are no exceptions. Just 25 Patriots and 28 Seahawks remain from those Super Bowl XLIX rosters from two seasons ago.

"The NFL is all about change, and it's funny. I'm sure everyone wants to talk about the Super Bowl and how much of a rematch and revenge for them [it will be], but there's just not that many guys on the team," Devin McCourty told reporters. "To me, it's just a very good football game. It's going to be two competitive teams that have won a lot and go into games ready and prepared to win."

Sure, many Seahawks have left, but plenty of the great ones remain like Russell Wilson, Doug Baldwin, Richard Sherman, Kam Chancellor and Earl Thomas. There's obviously a lot less on the line this time, but still plenty of reasons to expect an emotionally charged game under the lights in an NFL season that has been short on excitement.

1 Stopping Graham

It looks like Russell Wilson and Jimmy

Graham have finally connected. Wilson hit Graham on two beautiful touchdowns last week, as he reached the 100-yard receiving yard mark for the third time this season. It was the first touchdowns thrown by Wilson since Week 4, believe it or not. Are the Patriots ready? Well, the defense has two pretty good tight ends to practice against in Rob Gronkowski and Martellus Bennett. As it stands, the Patriots have allowed 41 receptions for 384 yards and one touchdown to tight ends this season. They're one of nine teams to allow one touchdown or less to a tight end this season. Graham is by far the best they've seen, though.

2 Legion of Boom

The players might act like this is the most important game only because it's the next game, but does anybody really believe that? A day does not go by where these Seahawks don't think or aren't reminded of how close they were to beating the Patriots in Super Bowl XLIX. And for that reason, an already Top 10 defense that ranks third in the NFL with 27 sacks — more than double the Patriots' sack total — will be that much more dangerous. Tom Brady has yet to throw an interception this season, and it will take some really good decision-making and protection to keep that streak going and keep him on his feet.

3 The best of the best

When Bill Belichick and Pete Carroll meet this Sunday, it's a meeting between two of the best coaches in the NFL. Belichick's resumé is well-known around here. Carroll, an ex-Patriots head coach, turned around USC before turning around the Seahawks' program. His coaching style is different from Belichick's (think: Cali dude vs. East Coaster), but the results are often the same. The Patriots are roughly 7.5-point favorites this week. The Seahawks, according to the Boston Herald, haven't lost a game by more than 10 points since October 2011, and have only lost two games by more than seven points over the last five years.
